FIFTH SUNDAY OF LENT (B)

As we approach the end of Lent, today's readings capture the meaning and background to what we will soon celebrate during Holy Week. In the First Reading, God, speaking through the prophet Jeremiah, recalls the covenants He had made with His people. These covenants were more than just agreements; they were a mechanism for God to be in close relationship with His people. God desires to share His divine life with His people. In the Old Testament we see animals such as lambs being sacrificed and their blood being sprinkled on the people as a sign of atonement for sin. Blood is a symbol of life, and so in doing this, the people intended to strengthen their bond with God. However the people were not faithful to the Law and Commandments of God, and so God promises a new and definitive covenant, written on the people's hearts, deep within them. The new covenant would draw people into close communion with God and they would learn to know Him.

At the Last Supper, Jesus told His disciples He was inaugurating a new covenant, 'This is the chalice of my blood, the blood of the new and eternal covenant, which will be poured out for you and for many for the forgiveness of sins.' Jesus, in doing this, calls to mind the previous covenants and now claims to fulfil them: it is His own body sacrificed and blood poured out that will bring mankind forgiveness of their sins and the possibility of a new and deep friendship with God.

God in the first reading says 'deep within them I will plant my Law.' Jesus in the Gospel says that a wheat grain must fall to the ground and die in order to yield a rich harvest. In His own life, Jesus was able to accomplish the will of the Father by 'submitting humbly' (as St Paul tells us) to the suffering and death of the cross. Through that, He reaped a harvest of eternal life for us.

The reading teaches us that our lives too will not bear fruit and will be unfulfilled unless we die to self. Our Lord says, 'Anyone who loves his life loses it; anyone who hates his life in this world will keep it for the eternal life.' Jesus is not teaching us to despise ourselves but to put aside our instinct for self-preservation and trust in Him. If our lives are only ever focused on ourselves and on gratifying our own passions, we will not be able to produce fruit.

Dying to ourselves means putting others ahead of us, taking care of their needs, sacrificing for the good of our neighbour; this is the essence of love. Followers of Jesus believe that any effort, any penance, any sacrifice of comfort and convenience will bear fruit, if not in this life, then in the next – especially if the effort is made out of love for Christ and our neighbour.

Lent is about dying to self, so that God can live and work through us. In the Eucharist we have the supreme fulfilment of the First Reading and New Covenant. Jesus is truly present in the Eucharist, and when we receive Him, He is planted in our hearts. We receive grace through this Sacrament, which is the life of God in us. With the life of God in us we are empowered to go out and bear fruit. The smallest act of sacrifice, done with love will bear fruit for eternal life.
